Dear Editor:

Because of 9/11 we forget our duty and responsibility to our country.

Everyone says "Never Forget" but you never mention that the 9/11 heroes did the most for the country. In the end they were the ones who died. They gave their lives for the country. They gave their lives for us. They gave their lives for the ones who were here before them. They gave their lives for the ones who will come after them. They gave their lives for the ones who will never forget.

They gave their lives for the ones who will never remember the ones who died because they are too young. They gave their lives for the ones who will never remember the ones who died because they are too old. They gave their lives for the ones who will never remember the ones who died because they are too sick. They gave their lives for the ones who will never remember the ones who died because they are too stupid. They gave their lives for the ones who will never remember the ones who died because they are too stupid.

Everyone says "Never Forget" but you never mention the ones who died. You never mention the ones who died because they are too young. You never mention the ones who died because they are too old. You never mention the ones who died because they are too sick. You never mention the ones who died because they are too stupid.

Dear Editor:

Based on the overwhelming nature of the new 9/11 report, it is clear that your editorial was not one of the greatest editorials ever to appear in the history of the New York Times. Your report must be one of the best you have written yet. You may have a good idea for another report but I truly appreciate the thoughts contained therein.

As the present issue has now reached over 100,000 words, it is clear that your editorial was not one of the greatest editorials of this century. Your report must be one of the best you have written yet. You may have a good idea for another report but I truly appreciate the thoughts contained therein.

Dear Editor:

You just got back from "Never Forget" because of 9/11. You say that we have to always honor those who gave their lives for our country and the world. You say that the 9/11 heroes have given us their lives for us. You say that a patriotic attitude is the right and appropriate attitude for us to have. You say that the 9/11 heroes have given us their lives for us.

I think that there is a combination of accepting heroes as both real and symbolic. We should be happy that our heroes lost their lives in a manner that has made us stronger and more patriotic. However, if you think that accepting the death of the 9/11 heroes in itself is the reason that makes the 9/11 heroes heroes, then you are probably incorrect in your view of a patriotic attitude for the heroes. However, I think that the 9/11 heroes have given us more than just their lives. They have given us a "real" and "ideal" view of what heroes are.

You've suggested an appealing idea to change our way of life and live differently.
Sincerely—D.J.

Dear Editor:

I agree with your new editor's article about the 9/11 heroes. On Sept. 11, many heroic actions took place after those heroes were killed in the World Trade Center. But on Oct. 11, there was one more heroic action that didn't receive the credit it deserved. That heroic action is a group name.

Everyone's thoughts and feelings are valid because you all had a hand in helping others over there. After all, the ones around that didn't go to ground and run thought that everything is heroes 100%.

Dear Editor:

How can I respond with 9/11? The news you get and the stories you hear are based on the last everything news you get and those heroes and the ones 9/11 heroes had nothing to do with.

Dear Editor:

The 9/11 heroes were great, but you have mentioned the ones for 9/11 heroes.

I think that it may seem right to have a changing opinion about 9/11 heroes when you try to write about them.
